7. [redacted] Talked to Bill Cook, House Armed Services Committee staff, regarding the possibility of contacting some of the House "objectors" to head off any possible problems when our retirement legislation reaches the floor. Cook advised against any action on our part, remarking that Acting Chairman Philip Philbin had told the Committee staff that he alone would handle the problem of the objectors.

I mentioned to Cook that the Time article on Cienfuegos was misleading in a number of important respects and I would be glad to brief any of the Committee on the details if they were interested. He said he saw no need for this at the moment.
